2. PRESENTATIONS

- a. General Plan - Land Use Jay Baughman, Assistant City Administrator/Community Development Director, Rob Patterson, City Attorney/Planning & Zoning Administrator
The City Council and Planning Commission will discuss the Land Use Element of the General Plan.

Sam Taylor of Landmark Design used the aid of a PowerPoint presentation to facilitate a review of the Land Use Element #1 of the proposed Highland City General Plan update project. The goals for today's meeting are to verify data and explore strategies, policies, and ideas related to land use. The goal is not to 'get in the weeds' and discuss any details or issues with a specific property. Utah State Code provides general requirements for the land use element of a General Plan; according to Section 10-9a-403 of Utah Code Annotated (UCA), the land use element:

1. Designates the long-term goals and the proposed extent, general distribution, and location of land for housing for residents of various income levels, business, industry, agriculture, recreation, education, public buildings and grounds, open space, and other categories of public and private uses of land as appropriate.
2. Includes a statement of the projections for and standards of population density and building intensity recommended for the various land use categories covered by the plan.
3. Is coordinated to integrate the land use element with the water use and preservation element; and
4. Accounts for the effect of land use categories and land uses on water demand.

Aubry Larsen of Landmark Design then discussed the process of collecting and analyzing data to inform the land use element of the Plan; feedback provided via the 2024 Highland resident survey provided a framework for the data analysis portion of this project. She summarized three main themes communicated via the survey:

- Preserving low-density character:
 - Residents overwhelmingly express concern for any land use decisions that could jeopardize Highland's low-density, rural character.
 - Many strongly oppose high-density housing, citing concern for increased traffic, congestion, school overcrowding, and declining property values.
 - A preference for large residential lots reflects a broader desire to preserve open spaces and maintain Highland's small-town feel.
- Support for external accessory dwelling units (ADUs):
 - While the majority want to limit growth, many residents acknowledge that there are limited housing options available for seniors and young families.
 - Making allowances for external ADUs is seen by many as a reasonable way to provide additional housing without compromising Highland's low-density character.
 - Supports of external ADUs emphasize the importance of appropriate regulations, such as stipulations for use by family members, restrictions on short-term rentals, and traffic mitigation.
- Strategic commercial development:
 - Many residents express concern that increasing costs are becoming unaffordable, especially for seniors and long-term residents. Rather than tax hikes, many are calling for strategic commercial development that generates tax revenue while reducing dependence on residential property taxes.

- Residents express interest in bringing more retail businesses, restaurants, and high-end commercial development to areas such as the Town center or along Timpanogos Highway.

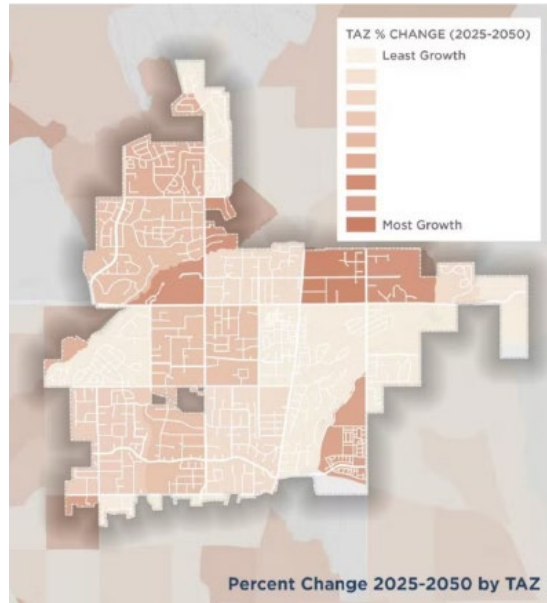

She provided a map that illustrated development patterns in Highland City based on Utah County parcel data. Properties colored yellow were developed prior to 1991; properties colored orange developed between 1991 and 2008; properties colored maroon developed between 2008 and 2023; and properties colored green are open space.

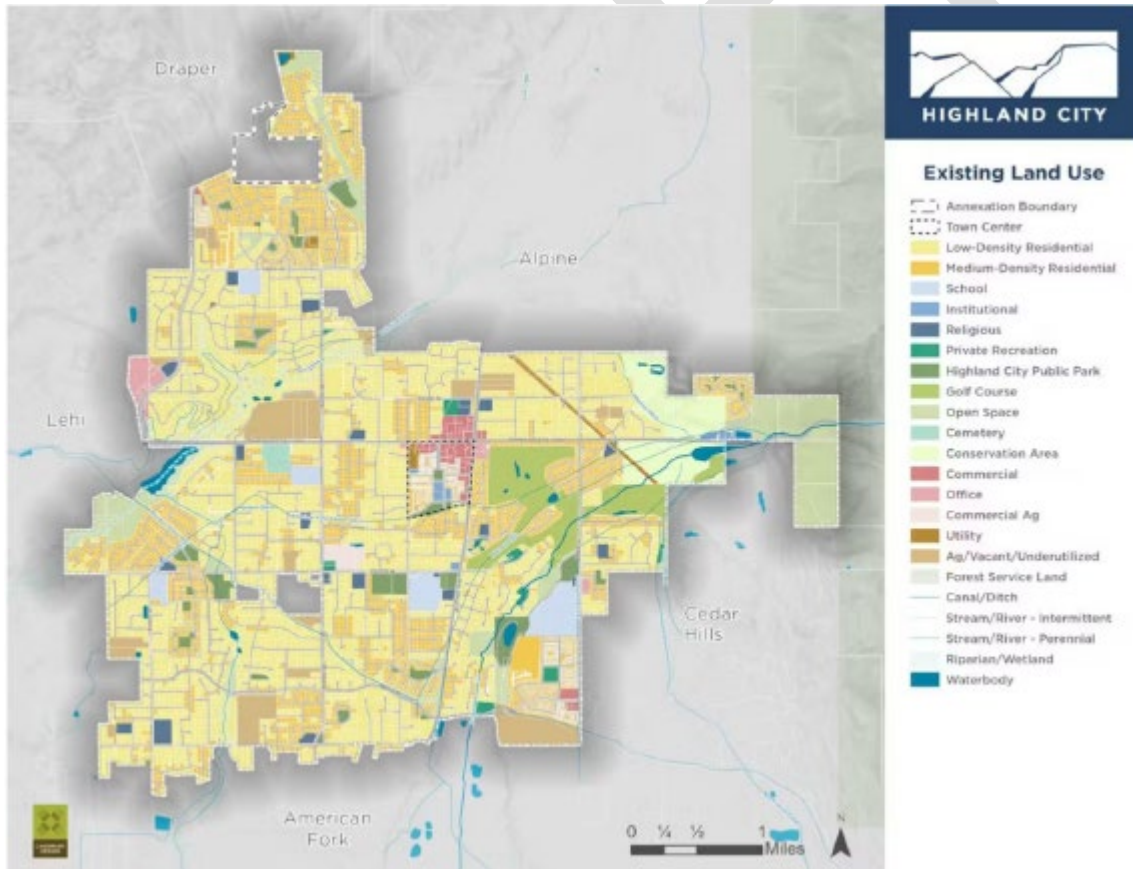

She then provided additional maps, the first identifying the highest concentration of address points as a way to visualize density as well as spots where there is a lot of activity or demand for activity.

The second was a map of traffic analysis zones (TAZ), which identified basic geographic areas used in the Stateside Travel Model based on census boundaries.

Finally, she presented the existing land use map for Highland City.

Ms. Larsen then discussed population and family data for Highland City; there is moderate population growth, an aging and maturing population, and smaller family sizes, which will gradually reshape the community needs and housing preferences through 2050. Population is projected to grow from 21,000 in 2025 to 24,446 by 2050, which is a 16 percent increase. There will be a gradual shift to more residents aged 10-29 and 45-64 and the average family size has declined by 4.7 percent from 4.45 in 2012 to 4.24 in 2023. In terms of housing trends, the predominantly single-family owner-occupied housing pattern is likely to continue, while limited housing varieties may influence the ability of some younger and older households to remain in or move to the community. In 2022, there were 4,925 housing units in the City and 85 percent of them are owner-occupied. The other 15 percent are renter occupied. Over the last 10 years, 1,526 new units have been built; 77 percent are single-family, and 21 percent are townhomes/duplexes. In terms of income, strong income levels currently support high housing costs, but rising prices may pose future affordability challenges for some households. Highland's income levels are among the highest in Utah; the median adjusted gross income (MAGI) and median household income exceed county and state averages. Owner and renter incomes are similarly high at approximately $166,000 in 2022. Median gross rent is $2,122 and the average owner-occupied housing cost is $1,742.

Mr. Taylor then provided other considerations, starting with population and economy. The type of businesses (restaurant, high-end/boutique retail) that residents want in Highland is very dependent on foot traffic. Adding "rooftops" within close proximity of commercial areas is one way to help generate this activity; without adequate patronage, these businesses may struggle to survive. State law requires online sales tax to remain locally and allowing additional households is one potential way to increase City revenue, especially as online sales are on the rise. Relative to housing, the offerings in Highland are limited in supporting families and their needs over time. Moves between homes/communities are very disruptive to community and individual social fabric and the unavailability of smaller homes may result in a more age-homogenous (middle-aged) community over time. A mix of housing types can help support a family-centered community.

He then referred back to the State's requirements regarding the land use element of the General Plan and he facilitated an exercise among the group to explore different strategies for complying for those requirements. Each participant scanned a QR code to answer five different prompts intended to generate discussion about land use strategies; the prompts were:

- What do you want Highland to be like for you and other families in 10 years?
- What does it mean to be a family centric community?
- What land use/housing strategies should the City pursue to help Highland remain a family-centered community?
- What measures should the City use to support existing and desired businesses in Highland?
- How do we do these things while retaining the quality-of-life people enjoy in Highland?

General high level philosophical discussion among the group centered on whether Highland can truly be classified as 'rural' based upon its population; opportunities for increasing walkability of the community; open space and trail connectivity; family friendly offerings/amenities in Highland City; demographics of the community; viability of mixed-use development concepts in certain areas of the City, such as the Town Center; infill development; age-restricted housing options and ADUs; supporting existing and future businesses; traffic congestion related to increased density; unintended consequences associated with requiring larger residential lots and preventing subdivision of smaller lots;

Mr. Taylor stated that the discussion tonight has been very productive, and he and his team will use the feedback provided to continue to refine Landmark Design's recommendations for the land use element of the General Plan. The next workshop will focus on the business community and economic development.
