That, furthermore, the current residents of the rental units located on the parcel be granted right of first refusal on said parcels. and that thereafter these units be titled as affordable home ownership units for housing households earning at or below 80% of the area median income AMI. Public Hearing

- Maha Barani – disputed claims of community support, questions why the more intrusive proposal now receives a positive staff report and argues that neglect shouldn't justify an upzone. She challenged the accuracy of the solar study, saying the building height would negatively affect nearby homes and solar access. She urged the project to be stepped back to reduce neighborhood impacts.
- Danielle Barani – a longtime resident and former 9/11 responder, raises fire-safety concerns, argued that emergency vehicles can't access Linden Avenue and that removing nearby hydrants endangers neighbors. They stress their deep ties to the area and feel the project ignores safety impacts on existing residents.
- Mark Rex – Shared concerns regarding the size of the proposal on the north end, the ability for Linden Ave to accommodate delivery vehicles and the like, and the height of the proposal.
- Cindy Cromer – noted 800 East is a low-scale, historic block with mostly 1-2 story homes. She shared concerns about the project's scale, orientation, and demolition plans conflict with the historic character of the neighborhood.
- Monica Hilding – East Central Community Council – opposes rezoning from MF35 to MU5 and the related general plan change. They argue the proposal rewards demolition by neglect, threatens naturally occurring affordable housing, and undermines the 2012 TSA plan designed to balance transit-oriented development with historic family neighborhoods. The council supports responsible development that preserves existing family-friendly units, maintains neighborhood scale, and provides diverse housing, rather than market-rate, student-focused projects that accelerate displacement.
- Melinda Mane – shared concerns about the scale of the proposal and fire access from Linden Ave. Requested denial of the proposal.
- Judy Valentine – Felt the existing housing should be left and the proposal didn't fit the neighborhood.
- Jen Colby – urges a negative recommendation, arguing the proposed project is larger, out of scale, and misaligned with housing needs. She emphasized the historic 800 East district's value, note overbuilding in the city, and criticized the project for rewarding demolition by neglect. She supports smaller, zoning-compliant development on vacant lots and stress that claimed "community benefits" mostly serve private interests.
