In Utah, there are no statutes mandating a retention for inmate records, but Utah Code 76-3-202 defines the maximum parole period for inmates based on the crime that has been committed. The original maximum period for a released inmate was 10 years. The original retention decision was 5 years after closed per RDR# 76-45. It was then decided that, due to potential recidivism of the parolees, criminal records should be kept for the entire 10-year period. In November 2005, the Board determined that the previous decision was inadequate to meet their administrative needs and requested it be lengthened to 15 years. In 2010, the board requested the retention
