Background:

The City went through a lengthy public involvement process for the State Street Districts with unprecedented participation. The public was receptive of the plan to locate mixed-use developments with commercial office and/or retail, and housing along the State Street corridor to preserve and protect existing single-family neighborhoods. Due to the feedback and support received from the community, the City Council approved the State Street Districts, which are now formalized in City Code.

Before the State Street Districts were adopted, many of the City Council had the opportunity to tour existing projects to get a feel for, and a vision for what State Street could become in the future. In that spirit, the City Council will attend a walking tour of the Sugar House area of Salt Lake City. The area has already changed in just the last couple of years. It has become one of the most desirable areas to live in Salt Lake City.
