SPECIAL MEETING – 7:00 p.m.
TIME COMMENCED – 7:15 p.m.

Mike Winder called the meeting to order. He recognized local legislators present who ran in the recent election. Mayor Jeff Silvestrini said the council was striving to create a city that everyone loved. In January 2022, the council met with executive staff in a strategic planning session. Prior to the meeting, everyone read the book, "For the Love of Cities." The book was about spaces and things people loved or did not about their communities. In every community, there are people known as the "doers," or co-creators, and the people invited to the meeting that evening represented some of them in Millcreek. The city wanted to learn from the creative people in the community and to know where to align its efforts.

1. Discussions on the Promise Program, Arts, Sustainability, Public Safety, Historic Preservation, Community Life, Budget, Public Works/Permitting, Planning, and Code

Mike Winder explained the group represented the city council, city staff, planning commissioners, historic preservation commission members, community council members, arts council members, Promise committee members, business council members, rotary club members, and local officials. He explained that there were nine tables which each had two hosts to introduce the following topics: Millcreek Promise Program, arts, sustainability, public safety, historic preservation, community life, budget, public works/building services, and planning/economic development. There would be time for people to discuss the topic and ask questions, and then people would rotate tables based on their preferences. There would be six rotations of the nine tables. The rotations and discussions then consumed the rest of the meeting.

The meeting ended at 8:25 p.m.
